

CIGARETTE PAPERS.

By JOSEPH HATTON.

Fashion and the Coster.

When Chevalier started for America it was doubted by more than one entrepreneur whether his coster-monger would be a failure. But his mark on any stage, and now there is an epidemic of coster scenes and songs right through the American continent. New York is no less enthusiastic at once, and he is quite a person in the club society. Later he has been discussing the true London coster with a leading journalist, and his picture of the popular East-end character is full of curious interest. He insists that his vocabulary shows foreign influence so does his dress. His love of colour is intense. The women almost approach the barbaric in their costumes. They do up their hair in a velvet net, and their shoes are high. This, of course, is their Sunday costume. A neighbour of Chevalier's in London doubted the truth of the actor's make-up, and when he took him to see the costers' quarter on Sunday he was himself surprised to find that the actor's make-up was precisely as he himself appears in the song of "The Old Kent Road." Stripped of its buttons, the coster coat is purely Georgian, square cut style. "If I were to rip the buttons off my Old Kent Road coat," said Chevalier, "I would be a coster." For the picturesque of society and the streets it is a pity the English people generally have not been as Conservative in the fashion of their attire as the coster. Every now and then comes from the East-end a report that something is to be done by way of a revival of the square cut and brass buttons. An effort is being made in the direction of coloured vests, and it was recently rumoured that the Prince of Wales was to wear a coloured vest and coloured cloth shoes, but even the most ardent American, says aside his familiar chequered for the French and English together the moment he arrives in either of the two great European cities, and the said report has long since become fashionable among the "swells" of New York. Boston Fashion has its eccentricities, but it is in some things it is consistent. It is going to introduce the bapies as a favourite instrument among ladies next season, as the society prophets announce, we may have to regret that the bicycle is killing the piano.

Du Maurier and the Fish-folk of Whitby.

Talking of the chimney-pot hat from an artist's point of view "next in order of demerit and impossibility" after the trower, Du Maurier (whose death puts our old friend "Punch" to rest) was a hard to represent correctly as a boat or fiddle—more so; and the delight of successful achievement is proportionately great. Linley Sambourne alone, who was originally trained as an architect, has been able to give a good idea of the fish-folk of Whitby, and succeeded by the sheer force of his heaven-born genius. There was always a pleasant exaggeration in Du Maurier's humour, and a rare literary touch in the brevity of his illustrated stories. His pencil did not wait upon the text, but he had his own story in picture and in print. I had the pleasure of meeting him at Whitby some years ago. It was a lesson and a delight to see with what subtle skill he transferred to "Punch" the humours of the life on the sea. In his text as well as his illustrations he caught the life and spirit of the fish-folk, their individual pose, their manners, and their very modes of thought and speech as if he had lived among all his life. It might be said that he flattened them, but it was the kind of flattening that is just the difference between the ordinary draughtsman who can draw the figure and the artist who can put life and thought and sentiment into it.

The Modesty of Merit.

The story of George Du Maurier's career is a rebuke to conceit; and conceit (with as big a C as you like) is the chief failing of the day. The way little people talk about their work, and more modest in art criticism than the best must all thoughtful folk with aches and pains. The actor who has played half a dozen parts, not one of them Shakespearean; the youthful painter who has been hung on the line at the English Art Club; the young woman who has written her first book; not to mention other beginners in art, poetry, and letters and other subtle things with an audacity that augurs ill for their future; it is the sort of precocity that comes from water on the brain. With a natural gift for music, Du Maurier by force of circumstance took up another branch of art. In the midst of his studentship he almost lost his sight, and came out of the doctor's hands minus the sight of one eye. Nothing daunted, he worked on. Later, when he was attacked with disease of the heart, he still held on his course with a cheerful mind, always the same modest, good-natured gentleman, achieving the highest distinction in a line of work at once beautiful and human, at a time of life when most men think of retiring on their laurels, he surprised the world as a novelist. He was a fine musician—he might have been a great one in public estimation if he had pursued music professionally. As an artist he held rank among the best, and he had a delicate and genuine humour. In his later days he won a popularity as a novelist that has given yet he never button-holed the public to talk about his art, his methods, his aims, nor measured himself against his contemporaries, unless it might be to compliment the work of another. It was Brayers who said to him "Modesty is a merit as shade is to

A Cuban Romance.

Miss Elizabeth Almy is a pretty New Yorker. She has relatives in the island of Cuba. They introduced her to Jose Martinez, a Cuban aristocrat. Both families owned plantations. When the revolution broke out, Don Jose's two sons joined the rebel forces. One was killed, the other taken prisoner and shot by order of the Spaniards. The unhappy widow, Jose's mother, was a Spaniard, and she and Miss Almy's relatives moved to Havana. Here the old man was taken sick. Miss Almy went to Havana to see her friends, and volunteered to nurse the sick man. When he recovered she went home to New York, and he wrote her several letters full of gratitude for her kindness, addressing her as if she might have been his daughter rather than a mere acquaintance. My latest files of the American newspapers contain an account of the death of Jose Martinez, who was called "speaking eyes" and a decidedly generous mouth. Here is a little romance for the short story teller, with shadow enough for a tragedy. If only that wretched writer had not really shown his hand, and had not met Miss Almy, and well then, finish the story for yourself; it bristles with suggestions.

The Penalties of Fame.

Don't you wish that the memorial statue of the future should be erected to something beautiful? The artistically symbolic of the work and the exhibition of the man or woman selected for the public distinction of marble or bronze? The bust of the celebrity could in every case be sculptured upon the base of the work, together with the engraved particulars of his birth and death, and a few examples of his work, notably that of Kit Marlowe at Canterbury; but the tendency is to aim at portraiture, and as a rule the projectors of public monuments generally insist upon this kind of thing. Not a certain American monument, the artistically descending in Chicago have just erected in Lincoln Park a statue of Hans Christian Andersen, their illustrious countryman. He is seated on a tree stump near the children's playground. By his side is a swan, and in his hand he holds a book. It is certainly an admirable idea, but it perpetuates the melancholy tombstone kind of effigy that we have so much of in London, poor attempts to realise in stone or bronze the figure and countenance of the dead. I never pass poor Mr. Peabody sitting in a chair in the Exchange in the City of London, without being sorry for him. What an opportunity was lost in that case! An emblematic figure of Charity would have been decorative, and might have been inspiring in that sordid corner of the town. It is certain that Mr. Peabody is far more satisfactory to Mr. Peabody if he ever visited the glimpses of the moon than the effigy of himself sitting in the cold all alone, wet or dry, night and day, a solitary wayfarer who has been accompanied by a swan, and in his hand he holds a book. It is a bootblack to pay him court or give him a gratuitous shine. But Andersen! What images of homely life, what dreams of fairyland, what birds of the air and creatures of the poetic brain might inspire the sculptor called upon to realise in marble the dreams of the children's story-teller!

Pity the Poor Lawyers!

While the status of the solicitor has improved, his earnings have decreased. It is only the barrister who has grown in wealth and social position at the same time. Both in novels and on the stage the rise of the lawyer, from knave to gentleman, is reflected in our day with remarkable accuracy. The purpose of a time when the playwright's favourite villain, in comedy and in drama, was the lawyer. He it was who falsified wills and betrayed the most solemn trusts. It is true he generally came to grief in the end, but that was in the days of the conventional play, in which the wicked was punished and virtue was rewarded. In modern novels the lawyer is the benevolent old gentleman, who calls upon the suffering and impecunious hero to ask his name, the names of his forbears, and other family particulars, and the purpose of perquisition as the poor fellow fears, but to inform him that a forgotten relative has died and left him a cool million, the said benevolent practitioner of the law producing a roll of notes and a cheque book to provide the hungry heir with such sums of money as he may desire "to go on with."

Right and Wrong of Diplomacy.

"The Eastern question, remember, does not terminate with the dominion of the Sultan," said a learned Indian, whom I met one day this week among a debating group of politicians. "He is our Pope, our spiritual chief, and we Mahomedans are a mighty power; should you join Russia to depose the Sultan, you play the game of St. Petersburg, and you alienate millions of believers and devotees in your Indian Empire. Moved by your just indignation at the misrule of Turkey, you must forget that you are a Mahomedan power, and that Russia is a European power. Give her the upper hand at Constantinople, and you strike a suicidal blow at your Empire of the East." Our statesmen have not forgotten this. It is because they have remembered it that we so long to treat the Russian statesman as a Russian, and that Russia has stood aside to give us the opportunity of exciting the animosity of our fellow subjects of the Orient.

CAUTION TO EMPLOYERS.

A young woman has been calling upon employers for waiting servants, stating that she has been sent through a well-known London agency, and that she has travelled by rail some miles, upon the understanding from the agents that the fare would be repaid by the lady of the house. In a number of cases, it is stated that her plausible story has succeeded, and that the money for the bogus rail journey has been paid to her. Employers will be asked for, instead of giving the money asked for, they will detain this young woman and communicate with the police.

TALK OF THE PEOPLE.

In the wonderful mess in which Lord Rosebery's resignation has plunged his unfortunate party a good many Radicals are beginning to cast longing eyes towards Harwarden, and to wonder whether the Old Man could be induced to come back. Things have even gone so far that arrangements have been made to provide him with a safe seat in case he cared to occupy it. Nevertheless there is not the slightest prospect of his return. In the first place, those who were his colleagues on the Treasury Bench would not submit to be effaced again; and, in the second, nothing on earth would induce him to undertake the leadership of the party while in Opposition.

Nothing shows how utterly demoralized the Radicals are just at present than the extraordinary advice offered to them by Lord Tweedmouth at Falkirk on Friday last. Lord Tweedmouth was Mr. Harwarden's chief Radical Whip in the House of Commons, and in consequence of the important part he played in the party, he is, therefore, worth listening to. His advice to the party was to leave the question of the leadership to be settled by the prerogative of the Sovereign "when the time arrived." In other words, the Crown was to have the pleasure of deciding who is to be the leader of the party when it has at last been won. I always thought that the one thing on which the Radicals prided themselves was the right to choose their leader for themselves, but it seems I was wrong. There is one comfort, however, in the fact that the question of the leadership is not decided until the Crown is called upon to appoint a Radical Premier, there seems every prospect of there being no leader at all for the next twenty years or so.

I suppose that it is absolutely necessary to lose all sense of the ridiculous before maturing into a rampaging Puritan. Therefore the laughter of the whole of London will probably have little or no effect in checking the aggressive people who attacked the West-end music halls before the Licensing Committee. Their extraordinary capacity for discovering indecency is as wonderful as the power of the pig to detect the existence of the truffle which lies yards below the surface of the ground. Indeed, the one comfort of the matter is that the more wonderful creatures of the two, for though the pig finds the fungi in all sorts of unexpected places, he rarely excites himself over those that do not exist. This is where the Puritan has the pull over him.

It must surely have struck you with surprise that though the West-end music halls were exposed to this preposterous attack, no attack was made on those of the Thames. Now I really do not think that these latter are so much more free from every taint of what is objectionable than the others that the prowling prudes can have nothing whatever to say against them. It is just possible that these people only care to investigate fashionable naughtiness and take no interest in it when the investigation does not carry with it free tickets to the best parts of the best music halls. If they are really in earnest in their puritan crusade why don't they turn their attention to making our streets cab-stand for decent men and women to walk through? At present they are a disgrace to civilization, and the prudes might do some good if they would devote to cleansing them the energies which they now devote to sniffing dirty ideas out of music hall songs.

It is quite absurd to raise a fuss about the refusal of the French Government to hand Tyan over to us, for they could not do so without breaking French law. Nobody can be more than ten years old, and they had therefore no power to detain him. The gentleman himself is said to be highly delighted at his release. It should not wonder, however, if his pleasure were not somewhat damped by the fact that he is in the United States. Those Irish-Americans are a touchy lot, and the revelations as to expending upon drink and debauchery the funds supplied him for much more desperate doings are not likely to endear him to them. If he had been an agent in the hands of the British Government he would not have done more to make them and their conspiracies ridiculous. If it should strike them in that light they might be very warm indeed for Mr. Tyan when he lands in New York.

The death of the Archbishop has had a strangely sobering effect upon us all, and there has been a marked decrease in religious rancour. Is it not possible for our countrymen to be friendly to maintain and even improve the state of things? England would be really almost an earthly Paradise if all who profess and call themselves Christians would devote their energies to forwarding the cause of Christianity to them, instead of attacking one another. Surely there is better work lying to the hand of any religious body whatever than denouncing some other Christian organization which happens to take a different view from itself as to the right relations of the State to religion.

Sir George Trevelyan is a weird oddity of a politician, who has no come to the conclusion that recent elections of the judges mean that treating may be carried on with almost absolute impunity, and sees therein great difficulties in front of the Radical party. How very mad! But Sir George quite sees that he is right in his fact. He can easily find out in his fact. In Bradford, and I have no doubt he has the interests of his party deeply at heart. I suggest that he should go to the constituency and distribute beer and buns on behalf of the Radical cause. I think I can promise him that no Unionist will divert a single bun from its proper destination; and, of course, if he is right, the judge will have nothing to say to him afterwards. But, you know, I don't quite think he will risk it.

The mail steamer Paris, which broke down soon after leaving New York, passed Sicily yesterday afternoon.

An elderly lady named Mary Campbell was found dead at her house in Brighton yesterday, and at the subsequent inquest a verdict of sudden death was returned.

Alfred Sully, 15, of Calcut, near Tetbury, was crushed to death between a traction engine and the boiler of the engine yesterday. Deceased was flag-bearer, but got on the draw bar between the engine tender and the boiler, and while descending a hill the pin came out of the bar.

Benjamin Tranter, of Bowley, was making preparations to go out shooting, and took hold of his gun when by some unexplained means it exploded, causing him bad injuries, one hand being completely shattered, necessitating amputation.

At Bantry, John Sullivan was committed for trial at the Cork Assizes on a charge of murdering his brother-in-law, William Wren, by cutting his throat with a penknife at Cappabueg, about 14 miles from Bantry on Sept. 23.

A dispute in the iron trade in Sheffield, which has been pending some time, has come to a head. The iron masters are only in dispute, and the men came out yesterday in accordance with notices. Between 600 and 700 are affected.

The large anchorworks in South Staffordshire district have decided at Dudley Heads to join the National Amalgamated Society of Shipbuilders for sanction to give notice to the employers for a 3s. basis and the usual working hours. This action has been deemed necessary in order to regulate prices.

The coming of age of Mr. R. B. Brasse, eldest son of Mr. A. Brasse, M.P. for Devon, was celebrated with much rejoicing at Haythrop. At a dinner of the employees a presentation was made on behalf of the tenants and others. The women and children were also entertained to tea, and dancing took place in the evening.

FOREIGN.

The rumours with regard to the Ottoman Bonds circulated yesterday on the Paris Bourse are stated by Reuters to be completely unfounded. The mail from Constantinople, containing letters for London, was lost yesterday morning while in transit from the consular office to the steamer.

The French Budget Committee yesterday examined the budget for the Ministry of War for 1897. Gen. Billot's estimates show a total of £27,000,000, or 6,000,000 less than for 1896.

The investigation regarding the letter sent to the Lord Mayor of Belfast threatening that he would be blown up with dynamite shows that it was sent by a half-witted man named Meckle, living near Winnipeg.

A permanent Korean Legation will be shortly established at St. Petersburg, the appointment of a Bulgarian diplomatic agent to Russia, probably in the person of M. Stantcheff, at present holding that post in Vienna, is also impending.

At Brighton County Court yesterday Mrs. Lamond brought an action against Mr. Richard, manager of the Gordon Hotel Co., and the license holder of the Hotel Metropole, Brighton, to recover damages for trespass and technical assault. She also applied for an injunction to restrain defendants from continuing to prevent her from using the hotel.

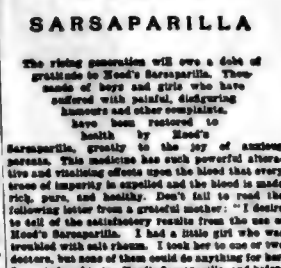

It appeared that the plaintiff resided at the hotel and invited 3 friends to dine with her. When she ordered dinner, however, the manager refused to serve her, although nothing had been said against her character. She was afterwards refused admission to the hotel. The case was not concluded when the court rose.

BELL-RINGERS AT LEWISHAM. Yesterday the annual meeting of the Lewisham District of the Kent County Association of Change Ringers was held in the Parish Hall, Lewisham, a special service being held in St. Mary's Church, during the day many took advantage of the opportunity to inspect the bells in the parish church tower, some of which are over 300 years old.

I told her to increase the advertisement of Kood's Sarsaparilla, which led me to try the medicine, for by the constant use of Kood's Sarsaparilla my little girl is better now than since her birth. After taking a bottle of Kood's Sarsaparilla, she, and he said she was out of health altogether. She had three bottles of medicine from him and then went to the seaside for a change. While she was away I happened to see Kood's Sarsaparilla advertised and I determined to try it. My daughter took a bottle of it, and when she returned home she commenced taking it."
